

Into the Stream: A Journey Through American Fly Fishing Literature

Fly fishing is a sport that has captured the imagination of Americans for centuries. It is a pursuit that is both challenging and rewarding, and it has inspired a rich body of literature. Astream: American Writers on Fly Fishing is a comprehensive anthology of some of the most important and influential writing on fly fishing in America.

The anthology includes essays, stories, and poems from a wide range of writers, including Ernest Hemingway, Norman Maclean, John Gierach, and Thomas McGuane. These writers capture the essence of fly fishing, from the thrill of the chase to the beauty of the natural world. They also explore the deeper meanings of the sport, such as its connection to nature and its role in our lives.
